More detailed information, including appropriate language for wills and trusts, is available on our website at www.parentingnow.org/legacy.

Making these kinds of plans can be hard to think about, and thus many people miss this easy and visionary way to give and create a lasting legacy at Parenting Now!

It’s easy to tell yourself...

But...I don’t do financial or estate planning.
Nearly everyone does financial or estate planning - you just don’t realize it! When you fill out life insurance or 401(k) forms for your employer, you are required to choose a beneficiary and a contingent beneficiary. Naming Parenting Now! as one of your beneficiaries can be one of the best and easiest way to include Parenting Now! in your plans. In fact, tax-deferred retirement plans may be heavily taxed if left to anyone other than a legally-recognized spouse. By naming Parenting Now! as a beneficiary, substantial estate and income taxes can be avoided.

But...I don’t have enough money.
Sometimes planning for what will happen after our death can seem unreal, with little connection to today. Even though you may not feel like you have enough, your estate will very likely have more than enough money to make a meaningful gift that will have a significant impact to Parenting Now! No matter how much you leave, you want to be sure it goes to the people and causes you care about.

But...I have children to take care of.
It is possible to take care of your kids and your favorite cause, too. Including Parenting Now! in your plans does not mean your children will be forgotten or given short shrift. There are many ways to include both your children and the causes you care about in your estate plans. Because you love and care about you children, it’s important that their inheritance include not just financial assets, but a better world and brighter future.
